

We've helped many families by donating 270 million diapers. (That's a lot.)

Diaper help is on the way

Hi there, babies! Did you know that Diaper Need Awareness Week is coming up? It's a week (Sept. 27-Oct. 3, to be precise) when we pay extra attention to the fact that not every baby's family can afford clean, fresh diapers.

For 10 years we have partnered with The National Diaper Bank Network to provide access to resources for families who may need support. We even partner with healthcare providers (HCPs, those nice people who help keep you healthy) to host diaper drives for your local communities.

Making care even better

Those nurses who helped you and your parents when you were born are always learning more about how to take good care of you. So we're offering a free virtual education series for which they get credit (or as they call it, CNEs), and there are just two more sessions before the end of the year!

Help for your parents

If you are staying in the NICU for a while, your parents are working hard to make sure you're getting the best care possible. It's a lot to manage, and they may need a little help. So we partnered with the trained support specialists at Hand to Hold® to provide a free downloadable app your parents can use to get support while they're supporting you.

We're going places!

We've all been cooped up for a while. But soon we'll be going to conferences with people who are really excited to learn the latest and greatest about taking care of you. And we look forward to seeing some of your HCPs there!
